

A goes to the Bus Stop

A: (walks up to the bus stop and starts waiting)

B: (walks up) Hey, you know the busses aren't running. Haven't you heard there's a strike?

A: No...you mean the busses aren't running at all? What ?! How are people supposed to get around?

B: We're stuck. That's just the way the world works. The city and the bus drivers are both acting greedy are we are all left to pay the consequences. Sometimes it really pisses me off how people let their own greed get in the way of the common good, but I guess that's just human nature.

A: That SUCKS.

C: Excuse me, I couldn't help overhearing you talking, but I don't think what you're saying is quite right. I don't think it's all about greed. The way I see it, the workers have been have been getting screwed, with worse and worse working conditions and worse wages every year. Now that they have come together to fight for their rights, the city's refusing to negotiate with them, and forcing them to strike because it's the only way to push for a change. That's the only power the workers have. You know how it is – the workers are always getting fucked by the owners, that's how the system works. That's why the busses aren't running.

A: I see what you're saying. Shoot, I know I always have trouble with my boss.

B: That's bollocks. The bosses aren't different than the workers. The just have different roles. That's how God set it up. People are people. It's not like we don't need bosses, it's just that people have to play their role. What messes everything up is when people get greedy and don't act right. Then the balance gets thrown off and everyone suffers. The way I see it, the bosses need to get over their greed and so do the workers. Somebody just needs to make them sit down and think about what they're doing, and stop acting so greedy.

C: That's not how things work! It's a fight between the owners and the workers, and it won't end until one side wins. I'm telling you, just watch, if the workers can hold out another week they're gonna win.

A: I don't CARE who wins, I'm just trying to get on the bus!
